

Looking at this print again I am left wondering whether the dark brickwork below the blanked off window indicates that originally this was a doorway. An internal inspection may, even now, throw some light on this. Regarding the number of rooms, on my second visit I made a note that the right hand end of the building was a coal order office; you will see the external post box on the front elevation.

I am afraid that seems to be all that I am able to contribute on this subject, but good luck and success with the venture.

Yours sincerely,

John Taylor
